

2025 Mid-Year Housing Trends — Tucson & Southern AZ

At the mid-point of 2025, the Tucson and Southern Arizona housing market reflects a mix of stability and regional growth. Year-to-date closed sales in the greater Tucson area are up a modest 0.3% compared to the same period in 2024, signaling relatively steady demand. Several submarkets are seeing stronger momentum, including Oro Valley, Vail, and Marana. Active listing inventory in June 2025 showed significant year-over-year increases in many areas, indicating growing supply and choice for buyers. The median sales price in Tucson for June was $365,000—down slightly from $369,000 a year ago—reflecting continued price stability, creating a window of opportunity for buyers while prices have moderated. The market remains more balanced, with healthy buyer interest and expanding options for consumers in key communities. Market conditions can vary greatly by neighborhood, so please check with your Long Realty agent for more information in your area.
